Bellow Forth is an eco-social art initiative, grounded in Traditional Ecological Knowledge and dedicated to restor(y)ing soil health and ecosystem/ecocultural resilience through art, storytelling, scientific research, education, and community collaboration across wildfire-affected Lands in northern New Mexico. Launched in 2023 following the 2022 Calf Canyon and Hermit's Peak Wildfires, this project promotes ecosystem regeneration through unconventional strategies. It integrates local knowledge, stories, and community-led actions into artworks/Land installations that facilitate long-term ecosystem science and monitoring.

On September 12, 2026, we will host a celebratory art/workshop event for communities to take part in and learn about these efforts. Guests are highly encouraged to stay on site and camp.

We invite YOU and your community to join us in grieving the losses and impacts of climate change, while also taking action - burying, planting, blessing, and celebrating what's possible in the wake. The day will include ceremony and prayer from Tewa Elders, and an educational workshop about facilitating ecological succession in post-fire ecosystems (above and belowground) through art, storytelling, and fungi, and planting native trees, shrubs, and seeds. Our shared labor will be followed by a feast in the baby forest surrounded by soundworks and music performances tuned towards the benefit of the entire ecosystem.
